Mr. Gatti-Casazza is a believer in the early Verdi and his belief was greatly early Verdi and his belief was greatly strengthened by the popular favor bestowed upon his revival of "La Forza del Destino." Whether a similar measure of approval will be dealt out to "Ernani" remains to be determined by the calculations of Earl Lowis and his aids. By way of explanation it may be said that these are the gentlemen who sit at the receipt of custom in the box offlee.

Once upon a time "Ernani" was deemed a revolutionary creation. It followed closely "Nabuco" and "I Lombardi" and was produced in Venice in 1844. Its fiery dramatic style, so different from the sugary refinements of Bellini and the vapid brilliancy of the facile Donizetti, gave it immediate success. The advent of an opera which had not only melody, but also passion and character, set Italy by the ears. But more than three-quarters of a century of nacre than three-quarters of a century of nusical progress have given us a per-pective which places "Ernani" near the Challenged Revolutionary Ideas.

We lack also the historical advanwas seething with evolutionary lifeas, which were relay to the lifeas of the l

the ante-Verdian stock.

One remembers Ernani's "O tu che l'alma adora," Elvira's "Ernani in wollami," Silva's "Infelice" and the ever admired solo of Carlos and ensemble "O sommo Carlo." But Alda" and "Otello" have made us almost as sophisticated as Verdi was when he wrote them, and we decide that it is hard to be a child again, even for one night.

The Philharmonic Society's programme last evening at Carnegie Hail contained four compositions sharply contrasted to each other in form and style, but—as a whole—of interest. The only approach to novelty was the third number, one by no means new here but heard last night for the first time at these concerts, namely, the "Death of Tintaglies," a poem by Charles Martin Loeffler, after Maeterlinck's drama, in which the part of the viola d'amore was played by Joseph Kovarik. This fine dramatic score was preceded by Brahms's violin concerto, performed by the distinguished soloist of the evening, Paul Kochanski, a work in which he made his debut here last season, and followed hy Tchaikovsky's brilliant "Marche Slave." The concert opened with Haydn's "Military" symphony.
